

This message is in regard to the NAB's attempt to limit the ability of satellite radio to offer local programming.

I am disgusted that this action is even being considered. What good could possibly come from hindering free-market competition? In many areas (including mine) terrestrial radio is monopolized or duopolized by the major corporations such as Clear Channel and Cumulus. What incentive is there for these companies to improve the quality of their service if the listeners and advertisers have nowhere else to turn?

I will lose all faith in the ability of the FCC if action is taken to strengthen these ridiculous monopolies.

Sincerely,

Jason Jach
